Labor Enumeration—No Time for a Recount.

The Dry Goods Reporter, a journal that is published in the interest of our dry goods merchants, is strongly advocating a reduction in the rates of wages paid for labor. We are not apprehensive of an early movement for the reduction of wages in this city, but attempts of that kind have been made in other places, and we therefore think it well that false arguments in favor of a reduction in this city should be promptly corrected. The journal to which we allude bases its argument upon a manifestly unreasonable foundation. It says that "in nearly all branches of industry, wages rule much above the nominal level; in other words, the price of labor ranges much higher than is warranted, simply by the premium on gold." The writer then goes on to say that this high rate of wages is attributable to the hitherto scarcity of labor, which has prevented employers from enforcing a curtailment; but now, he argues, there is an abundant supply of labor, and a reduction of wages should be made. If the price of gold governed the price of everything that a workingman expends his money for, then there would be some reason in demanding a reduction of wages so as to correspond with the premium on gold. During the early part of the war it was a favorite notion with many people that prices depended entirely upon the fluctuations in the gold market, and it was therefore supposed that when gold receded to the low figures all other articles would be affected in like proportion. But what are the facts? The price of gold reached $25 at one stage of the rebellion; now it is quoted at $16. Here we have a reduction of premium from 185 per cent. to 26 per cent.; has there been a corresponding reduction in the prices of flour, potatoes, meats, rents, etc.? On the contrary, the family expenses of a working-man are now more than they were when gold was at the highest notch. Some of the articles of consumption have materially declined in price; but on the other hand, the item of rents, which is a heavy one with the laborer, has advanced so as to outweigh all the other advantages. The Dry Goods Reporter is also in error concerning the present supply of labor. It is true that just at this time manufacturers and dealers are both pretty well supplied with goods, and the business of manufacturing is therefore less active than it was last Fall. But this fall is necessarily only temporary. The opening of the Southern market has increased the demand for Northern goods to an extent more than equal to the increase of labor resulting from the disbandment of soldiers, and there is far more likelihood of a scarcity than of a surplus of labor. There will be tangible ground for advocating a diminution of wages when family expenses shall have been permanently reduced. But at this time, when rents are going up fifty per cent., and when workmen are puzzling their brains to determine how they may make their present wages cover expenses, there is neither justice, reason nor sense in advocating a reduction.

good one in theory, but the way in which he proposes to apply it, and the object that he has in view in its presentation, are not creditable to a Senator. Mr. WADDELL is now a bitter opponent of President J. B. JONES, and in order to defeat the supposed aspirations of the latter he would cut him off from re-election by his Constitutional amendment. That would be an unwarranted and anti-democratic proceeding. Mr. JONES has never been elected President, and it is contrary to the spirit of our Government to disqualify him by such means. But an amendment of the nature proposed, if made to take effect at some specified time in the future, so as to be operative after the next Presidential election, would unquestionably be a good feature. The vast power and patronage that are now controlled by the Executive, form a powerful inducement to labor for a re-election, and the evil of that ambition has been apparent in the administration of several Presidents during the last quarter of century. If this ambition were cut off by rendering the President ineligible to a re-election, there would be no inducement for political intrigue. The opportunities and the threats of politicians would have no effect upon an Executive, but on the contrary, he would be stimulated by a desire to do his best for the interests of the country, so as to leave a bright record behind him. The plan of electing by direct vote it is not worth while to discuss, for the present Congress is too shrewd to do anything so foolish, in a partisan sense. Suppose a Presidential election were to be held to-day under such a law. The Democratic party would receive almost the unanimous vote of the Southern States, which, with their heavy Northern vote, would give them the President by a large majority. A reference to the vote of 1860 will show that fact conclusively. The first named plan, however, is worthy of consideration, if applied as we have suggested, and the interests of the country would doubtless be subserved by its adoption.

Washington Market Retail Report.

FRIDAY EVENING, March 2, 1866.

While we have very little of commendation or encouragement to offer to-day relative to prices, either of fish, fowl, meat or vegetables, now ruling a Washington Market, we think it but justice to vendors, at this great centre of our city Commissary Department, to acknowledge that in point of quality we have seldom witnessed a more tempting display of leading articles than those which to-day load the stalls throughout the market. Indeed, a sort of "Spring opening" seems to have been indulged in by the hucksters and fishmongers of this locality; and to an epicure, fond of fat roasts and toothsome joints, fresh caught fish and slightly fowls, a saunter through this market, in its present condition, must be as agreeable as an "opening day's" shopping tour through Broadway is to the most enthusiastic worshiper at the shrine of fashion. Regarding prices, we have but little change to make from those last quoted. The butter market still continues much excited, and as an indication of what may soon be expected in this market we report that the best quality State firkins is selling to-day at wholesale for 60c per lb., and the tendency is still upward. The market for fowls is much better supplied than during last week, and prices are declining.
